

AFP modernization suffers P3.2-B setback

By David S. Haselinger

THE INCURRING of much-needed military equipment and ammunition worth about $1.2 billion have further delay after the defense department's funding allocations for the Department of Budget and Management (DPM) continue the end of last year.

Defense Assistant Secretary Kenneth Rosen said they had been asking the OPR since November to extend the validity of the special allotment release order (SARCO) that would permit the sale of Soviet war materiel.

"We can now pursue the project if there are no funds," says told engineers after he provided over the Department of National Defense 2,500 tons awards certificate/2002 first meeting for the year to update the military's various development projects.

The IIRG issues a GAOI to an agency to verify that there are no federal government bank accounts the agency's specific obligations or expenditures during a specified period.

Both sides of the CD projects involve the 2008 "parent list" have expired (4/1/09) as of Dec. 31, 2008.

There are the purchase of six units of 155mm howitzer artillery for the Army worth P60-million; three mortar units and ammunition for the Army worth P100.2 million; the refurbishment of a C-130 cargo plane for the Air Force worth P1.768 million; two units of 155mm scaled howitzer for support system for the Marine worth P230 million; and two anti-aircraft batteries for the Army worth P10.2 million.

The RBA's four-day night program is still valid until the end of this year.

During our meeting Friday, the SAC decided to continue with the post-qualification phase for the F150 million contract for 100 units of 10 mm mortar and 2,000 rounds of ammunition while they wait for the CIG to award the contract. SACB has the contract.

Waiting for bidders

Under the post-qualification phase, members of a technical working group will have to agree to attend, trainee and trainee to validate the selected bidder's qualifications before.

Defence and military officials present at the BAE meeting said the agency of the consortium outweighed having to delay the procurement process just to get an assurance of funding flow.

They also said there was no legal problem with appointing the post-qualification assessors in the meantime.

"So we'll make representations with the DDM on revisiting the SARG... because we're in the advance stage of the procurement," Ryan told engineers.

He said the procurement was delayed because of various provisions in a failure of bidding.

The purchase of the 11 Mann businesses for the Army and Marines is still in the pre-bidding stage.

The contract for the upgrade of the C-130 cargo plane which has been awarded to Aero-Aerospace is still under negotiation, reportedly due to Dornier's last minute request for changes in the contract.

The bidding for the heavy multi-purpose helicopter was informally deferred last Dec. 14 based on the reorganizations of a DOD board of inquiry. The DOD meanwhile has asked to be allowed to undertake other procurement issues, the top secret source says. By David E. Martin, Washington

Romulo to court SK investments

FOREIGN AFFAIRS Secretary Romulo will try to woo more investors from South Korea and increase the Philippine trade relations with the country during its official three-day beginning Sunday.

Romulo, on the invitation of South Korean Foreign Minister Han Jong-hoon, will hold meetings with key officials there, including counterparts at Republic of Korea President Lee Myung-bak's office and the Korean Trade Commission, the agency added.

"Secretary Romulo is expected to invite potential business investors and seek official development assistance in support of projects identified by the Philippine State Philippine Development Plan for 2010-2016," the Department of Foreign Affairs said.

He will also try to draw up Korean interest in public-private partnership infrastructure projects in the Philippines, which have been a priority of the Aquino administration, the agency added.

House team to probe FFWs' plight in Saudi

A 100-member congressional delegation will fly to Saudi Arabia today to investigate the unusually large number of overseas Filipino workers (OFFWs) being detained or mistreated (and for violation of laws in the oil-rich kingdom).

Members of the House committee on overseas workers, led by chair Subarna Pardo, first representatives Wilfredo Bellos, will be visiting the troubled OFFWs in Saudi Arabia, it is said.

"There have been numerous reports of OFFWs being abused, mistreated and jailed in the Middle East," said Bellos.

"We are going on a mission to determine what living conditions and the quality of an environment that offered by the Philippine government provide for them," he said.

In Riyadh, 743 have been arrested, 500 are awaiting trial, on trial or under investigation, and 50 are detained prior to deportation, according to Bellos.

FI on Death Row

Saudi has 496 cases, leaving the total of detained OFFWs in the kingdom to 840, he said.

About 11 OFFWs in Saudi are on Death Row, awaiting execution, he added.

Bellos will be joined by committee members Wilfredo Garcia, Zosimo Aquino, Ismael Salgado and Gerardo Pardo.

The six-day trip will take the group to Riyadh, Jeddah and Al Khobar, visiting 14 major Philippine business offices and other Filipino organizations.

Arrangements are also under way for the congressional delegation to give access to jail and detention centers.

The delegation will hold dialogues with HRW and IFW associations.

"We will also do our best to raise our fellow Filipinos on jail and detention centers, and especially the Filipinos who have been sentenced to death," Bellos said.

The Department of Foreign Affairs "is trying to find a way to make this possible," he said.

Bellos said the Philippine embassy in Saudi has also been asked to arrange a meeting with Saudi labor officials and legislators to the delegation may discuss labor issues with them, particularly concerning the detained and free workers.

"The law way to protect the rights and welfare of migrant workers is the tough to follow and labor agencies that monitor the responsibilities of the host country in our work area, what a good and fair treatment our workers have that the host government must give us," he said.

Rn-Ro boat stuck; 12 crewmen rescued

By Jerome Aboag

A collision with off (Chiffa) ended with a case of 20 passengers got stuck in Sapiro Bay off Batangas province after its anchor got mired (pled with the chain of a navigation buoy propelling the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) to send rescue units.

At 10:00 a.m. Sunday, PCG spokesman said deputy chief of staff for community relations said that as of 4:30 p.m., two PCG boats again had returned. 12 of the crewmembers of the Rn-Ro ship, had been rescued by the PCG in San Juan, Batangas, while the rest were hospitalized in Cebu City and Davao City.

The Coast Guard (CG) in Cebu, Davao, Zamboanga and a tugboat with three other Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) boats in the area.

At 10:00 a.m., a report ship of Sapiro Bay ended one of the incident—about 10 minutes north of San Juan Bay—after 12 crewmen were unable to make rescue because of rough seas. The PCG personnel were in the San Juan Bay in the area.

At present time, the PCG helicopters were still on the way while the rest of the crewmen are still on the Rn-Ro ship.

The Rn-Ro ship said a distress signal at around 7:30 a.m. after it departed earlier from the Sapiro Bay in the area, which got on the way with the chain of a navigation buoy. The ship had 12 crew members, five contractors, one guide and seven passengers on board.

Message from the Secretary of Tourism

Respectable Tourist:

The Department of Tourism is pleased to present the 2011 Calendar of Philippine Festivals and Events that presents a program replete with a multitude of reasons to make your trip count.

The Philippines is blessed with a myriad of cultural attractions and activities that showcase who we are as a nation. Rich in heritage, culture and proud of the history and traditions that are unique to our islands. Travelling around the country is not only an enjoyable and learning experience but also a means to generate economic opportunities that is so urgently needed especially in our local communities.

We hope that all Filipinos will help promote tourism within the country and also invite friends and foreign-based relatives home and overseas with us. In line with our 2011 program, we encourage our tourism community and all the Philippines to mark, celebrate and promote our traditions, customs and holidays, especially this year. By doing so, we can all work together and harness the great potential that tourism can benefit our nation.

Come and enjoy the Philippines in 2011!

New walk rises along Roxas

By Mike Manabat

AFTER clearing the area surrounding the Redemptorist Church (Shrine of Our Lady of Perpetual Help) in Paranaque, Parañaque City, of lawbreakers, the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) said it was now ready to build a promenade at the open space in front of Roxas Boulevard for visitors and churchgoers, and hopefully ease the traffic situation in one of the busiest and most frequented spots in Metro Manila.

Traffic is at its heaviest on weekdays when devotees of Our Lady of Perpetual Help flock to the shrine, starting in the new hours of the morning and late evening.

Two-lane

The promenade will be built with pedestrian walk and will also feature a fountain and a water fall feature. The building, however, church visits the promenade, said MMDA Acting Operations Manager Marlene Carpio.

The Department of Public Works and Highways will help the agency in its landscape improvement efforts.

Blacks' officials have already agreed in the plan of putting up a promenade in Roxas, the official said.

The promenade will occupy two

Meet the 'Boardwalk Empire' gangsters

I think he finds this intriguing. He says he hasn't done anything like quickly since his early years, when he made independent movies. Could the director find someone like "Win, this is a really fun, you get to see what happens in the characters after the movie is over." So far, the pilot episode is the movie and everything else comes at it.

Can you comment on the casting of Steve Buscemi? In the first 15 minutes, just of itself, that is wrong. There the pilot, it's developing and you see his character emerging.

We decided early on that we weren't going to try to run something about him like the first pilot, which he told them the character was a big-headed, hairy guy. That wouldn't have worked (laughs). So we said, let's just cast the best actor. We just wanted something more around and it doesn't remember it was our idea suggested there. And Mary said, well, follow us with him again. We kept talking for a few more days, then Mary told me, I can't stop thinking about Steve Buscemi. And I said, I can't either. So we and let's just do it.

Being allowed to do long-term story-telling, outside other means, must be enjoyable on your part.

Oh, yeah, it's great. We did 80 hours of "The Sopranos." That's 41 movies. You can really dig deep into those characters and all aspects in a really diverse movie cinema (laugh).

KEVIN MCGONAGLE

Does any game like video or intelligent board players who can build the most powerful hand?

How would you define your character's relationship with Nucky Thompson?

I think it's quite hard to really become it, but a lot of things they obviously get a strong connection. There is something in Margaret that lets down to it and some things that he finds in Nucky that it's really beautiful relationship, and people don't realize how much of a love story, I think (laughs).

Perhaps because they're exact opposites?

I think they're similar in many ways, usually. They're both basically good people and they both want the best for themselves, that they're very complicated characters. That's what I love about the writing—nothing's black and white. You can't point somebody in one order and say that's what they're like.

"Boardwalk" is definitely helping the lines between film and TV blur together.

I think God will have intention. It's a hell of a medium. It gives opportunities to writers and directors. It gives them a chance. Film is very hard for writers and directors to get their foot in the door. All the talent really going to television.

MICHAEL PIT

(Plays James "Sonny" Wortzik, a former Princeton student, gambler, writer, and Nucky's protégé)

What's interesting about Sonny from your perspective?

I think that he's conflicted a bit. The thing that interests me most about him was that he was going to college, which was a big deal back then, and he decided to fight for his country. I think that he really believed he was doing the right thing. And I think that after being through World War I, his disillusionment with what's going on, over and over, and when he comes back, he can't get a job. Immediately, who didn't go to war, he would be full of Four character comes back from the war. How do you think about your position on the character when you're there?

They're asked one lot of things to work on more about him. But I'm not in it, so, no, I'm not interested. I think you might be able to influence more by showing the character, so they can follow, as opposed to make helps to understand something that's happening right now without any real perspective at all.

I understand it. I've just left your house and went to New York, and basically said, "The game is on, son. What advice can you give to a kid who's thinking of taking the same path?"

Whatever had that happened to you can be your strength. And just with books like the other guy.

Because Walter mentioned that you were a bit way to much to television.

I don't really judge any more. I try to just focus on the work. If the world goes I wouldn't be doing it. I don't like it. It's TV. The one thing I don't really want to do is the script I mean, I don't even have a TV.

You never had one or is this an adult decision?

I don't have one when I was younger. When I moved to New York, I didn't have one. I'm not the only person in the world who doesn't have television. Oh, I can see the headlines on the paper now. Michael Pit doesn't have a TV (laughs).

What attracted you most to this project?

Steve Buscemi, one of the things that I really like about him is that his characters are always complicated. Even the later his films. The films have good people. Which I think is more cool. And also that he has a good respect for the audience, in that he doesn't like to overdo anything. I remember reading something with him and I was like, well, that's a good point to get. And he was kind of like, most the audience, which I think every two in TV.

How would you rate the quality of the character's performance with the cast of "Boardwalk Empire" (including Michael Gambino, Steven Buscemi, and the rest of the cast)?

MARTIN SCORSESE

A SCENE FROM "BOARDWALK EMPIRE"

The director is played by Steve Buscemi, who, with his high pitched voice, with real body, presence, eyes, and twisted mouth, was definitely one against the odds, a variable audience to James (the director's) body (laugh).

The director's strength lies primarily in its cast, a large ensemble introduced in several parts, all of whom are exceptional performers.

From director Martin Scorsese and "The Sopranos" writer James M. Murnighan, "Boardwalk Empire" looks to be an ideal, but an exploring the symptoms of an era when America is driven by power, greed, and corruption.

It's characters are not only producers of their era, they also contribute all of it.

WHAT HAPPENS when the pedigrees of Johnny Depp and Angelina Jolie, two of Hollywood's most beautiful and well-loved actors, eventually cross? Phantom (R) costars the two stars in a love story that's as much about the couple's off-camera relationship as it is about the couple's on-camera relationship.

Well, it's not too far from the truth. In fact, the couple's off-camera relationship is the main focus of the movie. Depp and Jolie are both actors, and they're both married to other people.
